Not illustrated. 1899 Excerpt: ...the Grand Temple having supervision over all. The order was introduced into St. Louis in 1853, and in June, 1854, a Grand Lodge was organized, with four temples in the State--one at Louisiana, one in St. Louis, one in Hannibal and one at Carrollton. The instituting officer was W. A. Lynch, of St. Louis, who became the first grand worthy templar of the Grand Temple. Among those present and participating in the organization from St. Louis were: G. W. Lynch, J. B. Higdon, William A. Lynch, Richard Ivers and T. S. Warne. The growth of the order was greatest just after the Civil War, when there were seven temples in St. Louis. Subsequently the order began to decline, and in July, 1882, there were but six temples in the State, with three in St. Louis. These temples passed out of existence a few years later, and the order ceased to be represented among the temperance organizations in St. Louis. Tillotson, Frederick E., who was a conspicuous figure in the fraternal circles of the city, and well and favorably known also in business circles, was born September 18, 1868, in Delhi, Illinois, and died in St. Louis, October 13, 1897. He was the son of Elias and Juliet (Townley) Tillotson, and his father, formerly engaged in the grain trade at Delhi and Jerseyville, has been for some years a resident of St. Louis. He was educated in the public schools of St. Louis, quitting school when eighteen years of age to turn his attention to business pursuits. At that time he entered the employ of the E. Tillotson Lumber & Commission Company, in the capacity of bookkeeper, and later transferred his services to the Harnett Lumber Company, where he also filled the position of bookkeeper until promoted to secretary and treasurer of the company. As financial officer of this corpora...
