

My Master, My Home

In this collection of short stories, Gunagriha describes a broad range of both entertaining and profound experiences that he witnessed over the course of several decades while studying under the guidance of spiritual master Sri Chinmoy. Excerpt: Hey people! Do you believe in miracles? The greatest miracle you could possibly imagine happened to me. All of my dreams came true - not dreams about the world, but about myself. (Unfortunately the world is not at all like my dreams.) I have been given the chance to live all my dreams. Every profound, spiritual dream from my childhood has come true. Like this one: I can live without lies. I live in a world of truth. I can live without any pangs of conscience, because I never do anything that bites me back. I don't hurt or exploit anyone at all. I don't act out in self-interest, so I don't do anything I'll come to regret. Maybe my actions are not always perfect, but at least I always act towards others the way I would want them to act towards me. I love every human being. Yes. Strange but true. This works because I do not pass judgment. I see the being in people, the being that strives for perfection, but alas still falls short of it. This way, outside factors do not determine my feelings. But my respect is for every living creature, not just people. I don't eat them. When I was a child I always dreamed of not having to eat meat. And I don't have to smoke or drink, either. I am free from all passions. I am free. You could say my life is one of complete fulfillment. Absolutely nothing is lacking. Everything that I have ever thought of as a major goal, anytime in my life, has been met. Now that there are no more goals, there is no more desire to meet them either. I have become the person I was born to be on this Earth. If that's not a miracle, then what is?
