A careful count has shown that in country air there are about 100,000 particles in every cubic inch, and in towns there are from 1,000,000 to 50,000,000 in a cubic inch. It is not possible to avoid all dust particles, and so provision is made in the air-passages to prevent their accumulation in the lungs, as has already been explained. Fig. 88.--Particles of dust from a living-room, magnified. Dusty air, however, should be avoided as far as possible, not only because the dust itself is objectionable, but also because of the germs of disease which are liable to be present in larger numbers when dust is plentiful. Living germs in the air.--About one out of every seven deaths in civilized countries is caused by consumption of the lungs. This disease is aptly called the great white plague. In all cases it is caused by breathing into the lungs the living germs which cause that disease. There they multiply and destroy the lung tissue. There is no danger of contracting consumption, or tuberculosis of the lungs, if the air is free from tubercular germs. The careless spitting of a consumptive may result in a spread of his disease to others. The sputum may dry in the room or on the street, and then be blown about with the dust. The germs, though dry, will live for a long time in a dormant state. As soon as they fall upon a spot where they can get moisture and food, they become active and increase in number. Old wall paper and carpets may have, clinging to them, many germs of this and other kinds. To sweep such carpets, or dust such walls, only sets afloat the dust and germs. The occupants of the room are then compelled to breathe them, or ...
